Navigating the clean-up process after wildfires and mudslides

The wildfires in Pacific Palisades, Malibu, and Altadena — compounded by devastating mudslides — have left property owners and managers facing a challenging recovery. As outlined by Los Angeles County, the clean-up process is divided into two distinct phases:

Phase 1 involves hazardous debris removal, which property owners do not need to sign up for. However, your property must pass an EPA inspection before moving to Phase 2.

Phase 2 involves the removal of remaining fire debris. Property owners can opt for government-sponsored clean-up programs or hire a private contractor — such as CAM Property Services — for more specialized assistance.

As a trusted partner in Southern California, CAM Property Services is fully equipped to manage fire debris removal. We can provide our clients with:

- License and insurance. Do business with a contractor that is licensed by the state of California and can safeguard you against further liabilities.
- Expertise in regulatory compliance: We navigate complex regulations to ensure your property meets all required standards.
- Tailored clean-up plans: Every property is unique, and we offer customized solutions for the fastest, most efficient recovery.
- Personalized service: We take the time to understand your needs, offering hands-on support throughout the process.
